CONELY SAYS ALL DEPENDS ON GERMANS

Delegates to Coming Moroccan Conference Can Soothe Things Over or Cause More Bad Feeling-All France Stirred By Fate of of Submarine.

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch and New York Herald.) (Copyright, by the New York Herald Co.) PARIS, July 15.—The past week has been notable in at least one particular. It has witnessed the close of the little unpleasantness between France and Ger-many, a difference which had Morocco as its excuse, and, for its real reason, the policy so long followed by M. Delcasse, a policy that had endured, in fact, for well high seven years. M. Rouvier read to the Chamber of Deputie, the notes that had been exchanged on the subject between Germany and France, and finally, the text of the declaration in which the two powers declare their accord.

This agreement, be it understood, was rendered easy by the forebearance of the Frenchmen, who yielded on p. act.edly every point. They, indeed, have agreed to attend the Morocian concerence and have agreed to do so without first demanding from Germany an explanation as to just what this conference. a literated to bring about. This submission on the part of France was rendered easy for her. I may say, by the perfect courtesy with which the negotiations were carried out and the recognition of her privileged position as a close neighbor of Morocco.

We should be altogether wrong to con-

Morocco.

We should be altogether wrong to consider it as a great moral victory, however, the more recognition of a geographical fact—that some three hunired kinemeters of our colonial frontier borders on Morocco—and that, in consquence, our interest is greater than another's, that border should be maintained beyond the line. As for the conference itself, whether it will result in more bad feeling or in a better feeling still, that all dopends on the attitude assumed the e by the German delegates. man delegates. Kaiser's Loss.

The Kaiser's LOSS.

However that may be, it is pretty safe to say that the Emperor of Germany has lost by the whole affair a great many enthusiastic admirers whom he formerly possessed in France. They will find it hard to pardon him the real war scare that he brought about by his obstreperous attitude. It was a poor sort of a way, to say the best, to lead folks here to forget their wounds—this brutal prodding of their scars.

their wounds—this bruin produing of their scars.

There is a good deal to be said in praise of the way that France maintained her equipoise in the face of it all. In spite of its strong stand for peace, I do not think that there was any stand for saerifice or that there was any saerifice of self-that there was any sacrifice of self-respect.

Well, the Chamber has come to a left and the last session presented the usual spectacle of our wise legislators, who had put off everything till the last moment-rushing through necessary legislation at fever heat. Among these latter measures was the calling for a general amnesty, and which falled, owing to the stubborn stand of the Right. The government, at one and the same time, wished to pardon those who had been condemned by the ligh Court of Justice and those who had been punished for the over-famous secret army reports. The Right, with a display of nothing more nor less than downright bad faith, accused the government of wishing to group its friends (those of the Right) with the army tile-bearers.

wishing to group its friends (those of the Right) with the army tale-bearers.
They did not stop to think that the republicans were perfectly jistifiable, even though they did thus group the two lots together, for, after all, the tale-bearers in the army merely used those weapons in defense of the republic which the partisans of the Right had used to bring about the republics downfall. The republicans had secured their private information from the Free Masons. The Right had got its information from the Jesuits. Every Frenchman must regret this manifestation of sheer intolerance.

The Sunken Submarine.

You can imagine how deeply all France has been stirred by the disaster to the ill fated submarine Farfadet, now sunk in the mud-off Bizarta with the bodies of fourteen sailors within her. There was a terrific struggle to bring the boat to the surface before death had won the unhappy crew. With high good will, but in vain, the Minister of Marine himself went to the scane of the disaster to superintend (fie salvage and to encourage the work of rescue, Every effort, backed as

It was with desperate desire to do, was doomed to failure, and to-day the flags of France are draped with black.

It was a sad coincidence, our colors in mourning at the very moment that we were so happy to throw them to the Bripps—in honor of the brave squadron you sent to carry home the body of Paul Joins—and the flag of old England, floated here for the visiting officers and men of her fleet, come to do us honor at Bream and at Parls. So, you see, there has been and at Parls. So, you see, there has been and at Parls. ## GERMAN CHANCELLOR WHO FORCED FRANCE TO TERMS

CHANCELLOR VON BUELOW.

Chancellor Von Buelow played one of the most important parts in the recent trouble between France and Germany. The resignation of M. Delcasse, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs, and the agreement of the Paris government to recognize the Moroccan conference proposed by the Kaiser are regarded as diplomatic triumphs for the chancellor. In recognition of his services the Kaiser has elevated Von Buelow to the rank of a prince.

It is many years since the society element of Paris has clung so long to the capital, and this is due, in great measure, to the meteorologic conditions which make the city still habitable, and also to the development of the automobile, which allows people to make a fifty-mile run into the country whenever the heat becomes excessive returning for dinner in the cool of the evening.
